THE COLON THEATRE.

The opera season now begins.

The doors of Colon will be thrown open to the public every second night.

Mr. Ferrar has brought out what is generally

termed a star company, to

delight

and enchant us.

The theatre and the

Municipality, the latter

has won the day; the theatre, however, the people, Ferrar has obtained

the theatre for us, we may say, nothing; ergo,

the prices

should be cheaper than

yet. To the

astonishment of the whole community, opera-going

public, the prices

are lower than ever; all the seats and boxes in the house are

ready taken, bought up

on speculation,

to be retailed to the public

at a profit,

a most unfair, ungenerous,

and improper

proceeding, and which

calls for the

severest

condemnation.

The charges in Colon this season are

so extraordinarily high

that only

millionaire

merchants, Ministers of Government, and members of Congress can afford to attend. Even in the

cabarets,

which for many of the ladies of Buenos Aires, whose husbands are not wealthy, was a kind of resort; every seat in the place has been bought up, and the public discontent at this proceeding has reached

such a point that we think it

behoves our great Lord Mayor,

Dn. Torcuato

Alvarez, to interpose and

stop this most

scandalous abuse.

That M. Ferrar incurs great expense in bringing out first-class companies from Europe

we all admit, and we are willing to allow him every latitude in the way of covering the cost of the theatre, but we must draw

the line somewhere, he

certains that the public

should have some

benefit from so liberal a contract. We should say that two

national dollars

for an entrance and

luna would be

quite sufficient to allow the theatre to continue. The theatre is a

public property, and

it belongs to the people of the city, who pay the

taxes, and who

have a right to interfere in Mr.

Ferrar's

management, when his

charges

surpass those

of Covent Garden,

London, or

the Grand Opera,

Paris.
